The Race and Ethnicity Hub

Narrator:

OpenLearn's Race and Ethnicity Hub was developed in the wake of the Black Lives Matter movement in 2020 following calls for Global Racial Justice. The resources on the hub range from historical perspectives to current day challenges on race and ethnicity, with articles, videos, audios, timelines and courses - that explore the themes of race, racism and ethnicity across the core faculty areas within The Open University

Spend a few minutes or several days exploring the wide range of resources, which are regularly updated. You could start by watching a 5 minute video, or reading one of the many articles and then work your way to take one of a range of free courses lasting from 4 to 24 hours.

The Race and Ethnicity Hub was conceived and developed with the support of the Open University's Black and Minority Ethnic Network. The resources are free, accessible and open to everyone.
