

NARRATOR: When you understand what makes children tick, you can support their learning more effectively. This course is about observing and listening to children for educational purposes. You'll develop knowledge and skills you can apply in the primary education sector. You'll observe children's play and learning inside and outside the classroom. You'll hear what children think about homework, learn about It and computing in the primary curriculum and about children and social media. And find out how teachers plan creative and cross-curricular projects for children. When you observe and listen to children, you become a learner yourself, so this course will also develop your skills as an adult professional lifelong learner. So whether you aim to work or volunteer as a Teaching Assistant, or become a teacher in the future, or you just want to find out about the world of the primary school, this course will develop your ability to understand and support young children's learning.
