

Making social worlds

Keep multiculturalism

Dr. Anthony Pun:

If they changed the word multiculturalism and put it a different word into it, it still means the same thing. And why are we doing this? I don't understand why they are doing this at all. Simply we that we have a multicultural society that is the best in the world, second to none, better than Canada, the United States, New Zealand. Why do you want to change it, you must have rocks in your head I think. So I believe that if the government and other perpetrators who are against multiculturalism think what multiculturalism's all about, think for themselves, define for themselves on their own, then they'll come to the conclusion it's inclusive to all including indigenous people, then wake up Australia, multiculturalism is here to stay because the landscape of our country is already multicultural, how are you going to go backwards. So we should follow them and say take three steps forward and two steps back, that's nonsense, we don't want to do that. We have something in our hands, which has worked well in the last three decades and will continue to work well in the next three decades. So don't change it for some selfish reasons or some reasons that people don't want us to know. Keep multiculturalism.
