

The law and social work in Scotland

This album tackles the complex relationships social workers experience in the wide spectrum of their work, from those with families affected by social deprivation to those with judges, lawyers and other members of the legal system. The tracks analyse the role of the family in Scottish life in relation to the many voluntary bodies that exist to assist and inform them, and the legal obligations of social workers. Participants from single mothers to solicitors present their perspectives in a series of frank, informative interviews. This material forms part of course K207: The Law and Social Work in Scotland.
