

INSTRUCTOR: From president of the USA to the manager in a TV office sitcom, from your own place of work to the groups you're part of in your spare time, leaders are all around us. Some of them may have made a real impression on your life or career for inspirational and motivational reasons, or maybe not.

But what makes a leader a good leader? What skills, attitudes, and characteristics make them good or bad at their job? You might be considering a leadership role as your next career step, or maybe you're in a leadership position already and finding it difficult to move your team forward.

If you're interested in finding out more from the perspective of a leader or a follower, then this free course, Leadership and Followership, will help you. Working through this course will help you to explore what makes a good leader, recognise common leadership challenges, and identify the skills you need to develop if you really want to enhance your own leadership experience.
