

Art and architecture

Unfinished business

Pierre Rosenberg

Museums are not sterilised. They are moving. They are changing. They are transforming. So when I hear saying that the Louvre will be finished in 1998 I agree with, because I have to say so. But in reality I know perfectly well that the museum will be never finished by chance. It's a living institution and if it would be finished, it would prove that the museum would be dead.